Location & surrounding area:

Playa Naranjo is a small village mostly used as transit point in and out from Puntarenas. The village has a ferry terminal and some hotels and bars. The native population of the village mainly consists of ex Europeans mixed with some northern Americans.

Local hotels offer wide range of activities including horseback riding, water and hiking sightseeing tours.

Playa Naranjo despite the apparent isolation from the world has very good transportation system with regular busses and ferries and serves as a gateway to some of the Costa Rica's most popular attractions.
